

Weddingly

You could close the booking in your first client meeting.

Most planners walk out of that meeting with a maybe. The client leaves trying to imagine what their wedding will look like. They go home, talk it over, second-guess the details, and come back with questions. It takes days — sometimes weeks — to close what should take one conversation.

The reason isn't your skills. It's that they can't see it yet.

The Real Cost

And once they've said yes, the revision cycles begin.

Almost every senior planner we've spoken to estimates they spend a third of their project time on revision management — not planning, revising. Re-explaining, re-confirming, re-sending updated layouts to people who already received the last version. That's weeks of your year spent correcting decisions that should have been made right the first time.

The tools haven't changed. The problem hasn't changed. Until now.

The Shift

What if the plan was agreed — in the meeting?

Not sketched. Not sent for feedback later. Actually agreed — by you and your client, in real time, in a shared visual environment where they see exactly what they're getting.

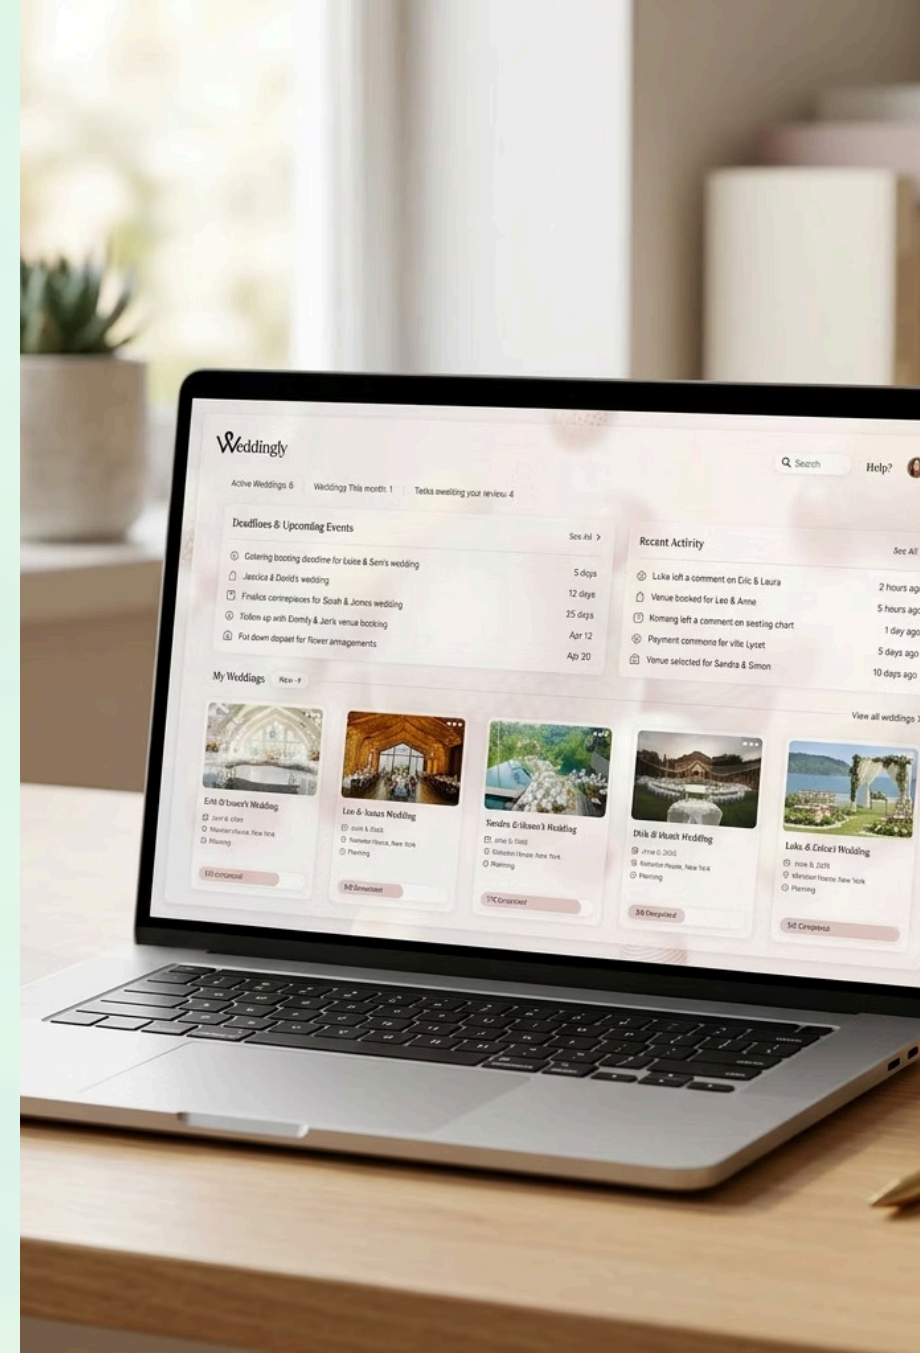

What you build in that meeting becomes the plan. Not a starting point for one.

Every tool in your current workflow was built for someone else

Marketplaces — WeddingWire, The Knot, Bridestory — were built for couples finding vendors. CRMs were built for your administration. Visualization tools were built for venues showcasing their spaces to prospects. None of them were built for the thing you actually do: coordinating a client, a venue, and a set of vendors around a single shared plan — in real time, across time zones, under pressure.

You've been stitching together tools that were never designed to work together.

Weddingly replaces the coordination layer. One environment — built from inside the destination wedding industry, for the coordination problem that is yours and only yours.

Seats: - 8 +

Table

Chairs

Tableware

Center

CTA

We're building this with a small group of planners. We want you in the room.

Watch the walkthrough → 3 minutes. Book a 2-hour session → work through a destination wedding scenario we've designed, live, with us. Shape how this evolves → early access, early pricing, early advantage.

Book your session:

ole@weddingly.org

+6282236318190

This is not a product demo. It's a working session.